Weil Adds Three IP Partners With Eye Toward West Coast Growth

July 31, 2025, 1:19 PM EDT

Doug Lumish, Jeff Homrig and Gabe Gross joined Weil, Gotshal & Manges as partners in its intellectual property practice, the firm announced today. Lumish and Gross will be based in the Silicon Valley and San Francisco offices, while Homrig will be based in Texas.

Lumish handles high-stakes patent, trade secret and other disputes across the technology and life sciences industries. He has a record of winning at all stages of litigation, including jury and bench trials, and on appeal, the firm said.

Homrig handles intellectual property, trade secrets and commercial cases for technology and life sciences companies, the firm said.

Gross specializes in patent, trade secret, licensing, trademark, copyright, false advertising and unfair competition disputes. He has technical expertise and a record of delivering trial victories in complex disputes across the life sciences, software, hardware and biotech sectors, the firm said.

“We are excited to welcome our new partners as we continue our growth initiative on the West coast across our core practice groups,” said Kyle Krpata, cohead of Weil’s U.S. Private Equity Group who is based in Silicon Valley.
